Former Intern Writes a Book!

In 2011, a young man from the US spent a few months with Lee Hishammuddin Allen & Gledhill as an intern. Jackson Shaw Kern was just starting out as a lawyer, integrated well with us and had a great time. Little did we know then the heights that he would soar to — he has since co-authored a book on the still-unfolding subject of investor-State dispute resolution, which has earned glowing reviews, such as this:

“This is a highly thoughtful and timely book, whose innovative proposals deserve careful study. Faced with the litany of criticism investor-State arbitration has recently been exposed to, it seeks to reform rather than surrender by setting out ways to rebalance what many perceive as a structural bias in favor of investors. The authors address the interests of a diversified group of stakeholders and suggest the inclusion of access to effective recourse for host States and their nationals in international investment treaties. With innovative proposals like these, including model texts, winter may not be coming in investor-State arbitration quite yet. A commendable work.”

Jackson is an inspiration for how far a young lawyer can go in his career when he puts his mind to the pursuit of excellence. LH-AG
